Who is “Renegade” Barak Obama?

What Do the Prophecies Say?

On April 2008 Professor Eugene Randell, Deputy Director of the Smithsonian Institution Archives disclosed unreleased Nostradamus information he felt pertained to the up and coming US elections.

The Institute which holds some very rare Nostradamus manuscripts, believes that some of the quatrains written by the 16th century soothsayer are very close to describing the fight for the White House that is happening now.

"We have the only existing fourth edition of Nostradamus' book Les Propheties (The Prophecies). There were thought to be only three editions published in 1558, this new edition is from 1559 and includes 20 more quatrains which have never been revealed before -- that is, until now," Professor Randell said on Tuesday, April 8th, 2008.

It seems that with the release of the new quatrains Obama is identifies as “the dark one,” and he is to wrest control from the Anglo-American dynasty of white rulers. Nostradamus enthusiasts are saying the race for the White House may have been already written about many centuries ago. Here is the translated quatrain;

*The great empire will be torn from limb,
The all-powerful one for more than four hundred years:
Great power given to the dark one from slaves come,
The Aryana will not be satisfied thereby.*

Boston Globe staff writer Foon Rhee asked: does Senator John McCain's Web ad mocking Barack Obama as "The One" have a darker design?⁴⁵⁴

Outraged Christian supporters of Obama said it does - that it was intended to further Internet-fueled rumors that Obama is the antichrist. Deconstructing and analyzing the ad, they say the images and language play into apocalyptic themes, including those featured in the best-selling "Left Behind" series, fictionalized accounts of the end of the world.

As the ad begins with the words "It should be known that in 2008 the world shall be blessed. They will call him The One" flashing across the screen. The Antichrist of the *Left Behind*⁴⁵⁵ books is a charismatic young political leader named Nicolae Carpathia who founds the One World religion (slogan: "We Are God") and promises to heal the world after a time of deep division. One of several Obama clips in the ad features the Senator saying, "A nation healed, a world repaired. We are the ones that we've been waiting for."

Despite Nostradamus' ramblings and McCain's apocalyptic themed tongue-in-cheek proclamation of Barak Obama as "the One,"⁴⁵⁶ there are two genuine prophecies describe him as both a "promised warrior" coming to help the Hidden Imam of Shiite Muslims conquer the world, and a Kenyan "son" that will destroy America.

The Muslim Promised Warrior - Is Barack Obama the "promised warrior" coming to help the Hidden Imam of Shiite Muslims conquer the world? This is the question that Amir Taheri asks in an October 26, 2008 Forbes magazine article.⁴⁵⁷

Taheri says the question has made the rounds in Iran since last month, when a pro-government Web site published a Hadith (or tradition) from a Shiite text of the 17th century. The tradition comes from Bahar al-Anvar (meaning Oceans of Light) by Mullah Majlisi, a magnum opus in 132 volumes and the basis of modern Shiite Islam.

According to the tradition, Imam Ali Ibn Abi-Talib (the prophet's cousin and son-in-law) prophesied that at the End of Times and just before the return of the Mahdi, the Ultimate Saviour, a "tall black man will assume the reins of government in the West." Commanding "the strongest army on earth," the new ruler in the West will carry "a clear sign" from the third imam, whose name was Hussein Ibn Ali. The tradition concludes: "Shiites should have no doubt that he is with us."

In a curious coincidence Obama's first and second names--Barack Hussein--mean "the blessing of Hussein" in Arabic and Persian. His family name, Obama, written in the Persian alphabet, reads O Ba Ma, which means "he is with us," the magic formula in Majlisi's tradition.

Kenyan Son and Destroyer of America - Is Barak Obama the "Son of Kenya" foretold by the great 19th Century Kenyan Prophet, Johanwa Owalo, the founder of Kenya's Nomiya Luo Church?

Among the Kenyan people of the Luo religion Owalo is believed to be a prophet similar to Jesus Christ and Muhammad, and who in 1912 made this horrific prophecy about the United States: "So far have they [the United States] strayed into wickedness in those [future] times that their destruction has been sealed by my [father]. Their great cities will burn, their crops and cattle will suffer disease and death, their children will perish from diseases never seen upon this Earth, and I reveal to you the greatest [mystery] of all as I have been allowed to see that their [the United States] destruction will come about through the vengeful hands of one of our very own sons."⁴⁵⁸

The Luo (also called Jaluo and Joluo) are an ethnic group in Kenya, eastern Uganda, and northern Tanzania. They are part of a larger group of ethnolinguistically related Luo peoples who inhabit an area including southern Sudan, northern and eastern Uganda, western Kenya, and northern Tanzania. Throughout the 19th Century AD, the Luo migrated from lower savanna grasslands for higher and cooler regions with reliable rainfall. According to the last national population census conducted in 1989, the Luo number over three million people, or about 13 percent of Kenya's total population.

The Nomiya Luo Church (a mixture of Christianity and African tribal beliefs), began in 1912, it was the first independent church in Kenya. The founder of this church, Johanwa Owalo, was believed to be a prophet and leader similar to Jesus Christ and Muhammad. Owalo later teamed up with a Catholic priest and began teaching a new theology that rejected both the Pope and the doctrine of the trinity. It was in the same year that the Nomiya Luo Church was founded, Owalo made the horrific prophecy about the United States.

Of course, it is absolutely true that Barack Obama is the son of a Kenyan. Here is what the official Barack Obama website reported:

Barack Obama was born in Hawaii on August 4th, 1961. His father, Barack Obama Sr., was born and raised in a small village in Kenya, where he grew up herding goats with his own father, who was a domestic servant to the British...Barack's father eventually returned to Kenya, and Barack grew up with his mother in Hawaii, and for a few years in Indonesia. Later, he moved to New York, where he graduated from Columbia University in 1983.)

Dreams From My Father - pg 310 "Inside the stall, an old woman who was stringing glass beads together pointed at me and said something that made auma (baracks half sister) smile. 'what did she say?' 'she says you look american to her' 'tell her I'm Luo,' I said beating my chest..."

President Obama does appear to meet the requirements of this prophecy as he is, indeed, a 'son' of the Kenyan Luo tribal religion; born on August 4, 1961 in Honolulu, Hawaii to Barack Obama, Sr. (born in Nyanza Province, Kenya, of Luo ethnicity) and Stanley Ann Dunham.

Thus, this potential prophecy concerning Barak Obama was spoken by Johanwa Owalo, and reported by Sister Mary McCrea of the Sorcha Faal Order in her 1915 copyrighted document "Visions of the Great Nyasaye, A Study of the Luo Religion in Kenya". (Go to: www.firststonellc.com/JohanwaOwaloResearch.pdf for extensive research and documentation.)

Who is “Renegade” Barak Obama?

To elect Obama would be “to ‘roll the dice’ for America,” warned former president Bill Clinton (“Obama showing new confidence with Iowa sprint,” New York Times, Dec. 16, 2007).

Numerous thinkers have suggested that the office of the presidency has become dangerously powerful. It would be easy to use the excuse of a terrorist attack to proclaim martial law and use the machinery of government to silence critics. Presidents can start wars; Congress was supposed to have this power, according to the Constitution.

Ordinary Americans have dropped out of the political process to the extent that they expect the president to do the hard work of democracy for them (see Dana D. Nelson's excellent "Bad for Democracy"⁴⁵⁹ in which she argues that excessive trust in the presidency is a grave problem). The meager extent of American political participation seems to be voting for president -- that's all we do -- and that's not enough. The office is a magnet for the shrewd, for persons with extreme political ambition, and there is real danger that below the mask of any president, even one as apparently good and fair as President Obama seems to be, may lurk a tyrant.

Psychological Profile of Barak Obama

Initially one can ask: why profile President Obama? Is Psychological profiling and personality screening really needed? The answer is yes; understanding a powerful public figure's psyche and psychological motivation are important tools in crisis prevention and risk management, especially when that person holds the codes to the world's most numerous, powerful and advanced nuclear weapons.

A review of Obama's public speeches, campaign materials and especially his writings reflect that Obama's personality has been remarkably consistent from childhood through adulthood.

In his book “Dreams From my Father,” Obama lays out the foundation for an examination of his character and personality. That seminal work reveals much, and almost all of what it reveals is truthful and applicable to his presidential prospects.

Obama's life began with loss, hurt, confusion, alienation, frustration. Out of these he constructed a psychological "mask" that still endures.

What the MBTI psychological personality test reveals about Obama.

The Meyers-Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI) was developed by a team that wanted a practical application for the ideas of personality developed by psychologist Carl Jung. By mixing and matching four poles of personal style—extravert and introvert being the best known—the team came up with 16 personality types. Psychologists Otto Kroeger has revised the 16 personality types and David Keirsey sorted these into four overarching categories: Artisans, Guardians, Idealists, and Rationals. (He describes his classifications in the book Please Understand Me II and at this Web site, www.keirsey.com.)

Such personality testing is at times derided by academia, but it's used widely by corporations, the military, and government to understand different leadership styles and the dynamics of working in groups. Finding out your personality type requires answering dozens of questions such as, "Do you find visionaries and theorists a) somewhat annoying [or] b) rather fascinating?" and "When finishing a job, do you like to a) tie up all the loose ends [or] b) move on to something else?" Meta-analysis was used to formulate conclusions.

Barack Obama—no one will be surprised to learn—is an Idealist. His specific type is an ENFP, what Keirsey calls "the Champion." ENFPs, says Keirsey, are "filled with conviction that they can easily motivate those around them." Champions work to "kindle, to rouse, to encourage, even to inspire those close to them with their enthusiasm." Idealists "usually have a tongue of silver" and are "gifted in seeing the possibilities" of institutions and people. Here's Obama on leadership: "[W]e need leaders to inspire us. Some are thinking about our constraints, and others are thinking about limitless possibility."

This ability to move people through imagery and rhetoric carries a danger for the ENFP, says Keirse— a belief in "word magic." "Word magic refers to the ancient idea that words have the ability to make things happen—saying makes it so." This is the basis of the critique of Obama by his less-soaring opponents. Hillary complains that people ask her to "give us one of those great rhetorical flourishes and then, you know, get everybody all whooped up." (As if she could.) John McCain said, "To encourage a country with only rhetoric is not a promise of hope. It is a platitude."

Nonetheless, having surfed to power on a wave of voter discontent generated by the failures of President George Bush and the Republican Party, and having generated a level of enthusiasm among supporters not seen in decades, Barack Obama has become the 44th president of the United States.

But as he enters the White House, he faces challenges almost unique in modern times.

It has been 40 years since a new president took office in a time of war.

And with the American economy facing what could be its worst crisis since the Great Depression of the late 1920s, Obama will have to act quickly to restore confidence.

On top of all this, add the confused geopolitical dynamics of a world devolving into multi-polarity, at a time when the US' credibility and reputation is at an all time low, and you get a sense of the terrible pressures a young, new president is inheriting.

He may just become one of the most extraordinary leaders the US has had in many years. So extraordinary that many have called him "The One"— as in a messiah, a deliverer — or in a negative sense, the Antichrist. Obama himself regularly intoned, as if casting a hypnotic spell;

"A light will shine down from somewhere, it will light upon you, you will experience an epiphany, and you will say to yourself, 'I have to vote for Barak.'"

The original quote was removed entirely from CNN articles in later publication, but we offer as evidence this reposting of the CNN article in full on January 28th by blogger 'Fair Proxy Web'; as well as cited by Roberto Davila-Loyola in January 8th, 2008 1:16 PM ET responding to original with this commentary:

"My job is to be so persuasive that if there's anybody left out there who is still not sure whether they will vote, or is still not clear who they will vote for, that a light will shine through that window, a beam of light will come down upon you, you will experience an epiphany ... and you will suddenly realize that you must go to the polls and vote for Obama," the Democrat said in Hanover.

The above words by Senator Obama as reported by CNN are troubling as they show Senator Obama believing that he has the power to cause a divine manifestation to the undecided voters of New Hampshire which will show them that he is the chosen one. Alternatively, he is contemptuously using as political rhetoric the Christian concept of what happened on the Feast of the Epiphany when a divine manifestation (the Star of Bethlehem) announced the birth of the Baby Jesus.

ABC News initially reported the dramatic over-reaction of press and supporters in an article called "Something Stirring in the Air." The article went on to accurately state that based on Obama's actions and his 'a light will shine...you'll have an epiphany' speeches, he evidenced the "makings of a messiah complex."⁴⁶⁰

YouTube, the electronic video pulse of America, aired a negative Obama presidential campaign advertisement created by the McCain camp, it is called "The One."⁴⁶¹ At an August 2008 fundraiser in San Francisco, US House Speaker Nancy Pelosi introduced Obama and said that he was "a leader that God has blessed us with at this time."⁴⁶² June 28, 2006, in a speech at The Call to Renewal's 'Building a Covenant for a New America' conference, Obama misinterpreted and mocked Old Testament scripture and questioned the wisdom of Jesus' Sermon on the Mount teachings. It was in this speech that Obama provides his prejudice (and indoctrination by Rev. Jeremiah Wright) against using the Bible to lead and guide America and its public and foreign policy.

In the same speech, Obama declares that the United States is no longer a Christian nation. He says, “Moreover, given the increased diversity of America’s population, the dangers of sectarianism have never been greater. Whatever we once were, we are no longer a Christian nation; (ed. ‘at least not just’ added during live speech) we are also a Jewish nation, a Muslim nation, a Buddhist nation, and a Hindu nation – and a nation of nonbelievers.”⁴⁶³

I understand (at least I think I do) what he is trying to do. On its face, Obama’s goals are to unite, and not continue to divide the Nation through sectarian dogmatism. He seems to infer that both religious belief and the use of religious language and metaphor are essential and valuable. Belief in private, except as a social conduit; and religious language and metaphor as a means of a public leader to illicit an emotional connection and inspire the populace.

The overwhelming victory of Barak Obama on a national level, rather than a blue or red state level, seems to reinforce his belief that Americans want peace more than they want doctrinal purity. Obama believes that a literalist reading of the Bible is folly. His personal questioning of Biblical inerrancy also seems to reflect the national uncertainty of Biblical inerrancy – which brand of Christianity is right? As he once asked, “whose Christianity would we teach in the schools? Would we go with James Dobson’s, or Al Sharpton’s?”⁴⁶⁴

Whose Christianity would we teach? That is an excellent question.

An even better question may be: who is Barak Hussein Obama?

The Salesman of Hope

During his election campaign, Obama sold hope. To get it, you needed only give him your vote. Barack Obama made millions.

"We are the hope of the future," sayeth Obama. We can "remake this world as it should be." Believe in me and I shall redeem not just you but your country -- nay, we can become "a hymn that will heal this nation, repair this world, and make this time different than all the rest."

That was too much for Time's Joe Klein. "There was something just a wee bit creepy about the mass messianism..." he wrote. Klein also said, "The message is becoming dangerously self-referential. The Obama campaign all too often is about how wonderful the Obama campaign is."

You might dismiss The New York Times' Paul Krugman's complaint that "the Obama campaign seems dangerously close to becoming a cult of personality" as hyperbole. Until you hear MSNBC's Chris Matthews, who no longer has the excuse of youth, react to Obama's Potomac primary victory speech with "My, I felt this thrill going up my leg." [Now, that's creepy.]

Obama has an astonishingly empty paper trail. He's going around issuing promissory notes on the future that he can't possibly redeem. The Obama spell will break. My guess is that he can maintain the spell past Inauguration Day, after which will come the awakening. It will be rude.

Obama's combination of confidence, assertiveness, and congeniality fits the profile of a charismatic leader; he is ambitious, dominant, and outgoing, which enables him to advance a personal vision, inspire followers, and connect with people. The outgoing pattern in Obama's personality profile may be key to his meteoric rise to prominence.

Keirse says Idealist leaders should be called catalysts because "[t]he individual who encounters such a leader is likely to be motivated, animated, even inspired to do his or her very best work." The New Yorker's Packer writes, "Obama offers himself as a catalyst by which disenchanted Americans can overcome two decades of vicious partisanship."

Idealists are deeply introspective. According to Keirse, their "self-confidence rests on their authenticity," which makes them "highly aware of themselves as objects of moral scrutiny." Idealists, such as Thomas Paine, Mohandas Gandhi, and Martin Luther King Jr., tend to be leaders of movements, not office-holders. If Obama is elected, not only would he be the first black president, but according to Keirse, he'd be the first Idealist president. Idealists are rare in any executive position and within the general population. Because they tend to have a positive outlook, they can be "surprised when people or events do not turn out as anticipated."

The ENFP can have a problem with "restlessness," says Kroeger. "As a task or responsibility drags on and its mantle becomes increasingly routine, the ENFP can become more pensive, moody, and even rigid." Obama himself referred in a debate to his disorganization and dislike of paperwork—and his self-knowledge that "I need to have good people in place who can make sure that systems run."⁴⁶⁵ Good people like, say, Hillary Clinton?

More significantly from a profiling approach, his personality lends itself to planting subtle nuggets of self-revelation in his writings. His earlier writings, moreover, were prepared at a time when the prospects of a presidential campaign were probably not even an idle dream. So these early statements are especially helpful to a personality examination and identification.

He apparently held and still holds Kenyan-American dual nationality, but has scrupulously avoided any discussion of his "dual" status. Duality is not what Obama craves: he craves the singular, the linear, and the straight and narrow, to compensate for his own confused and winding initiation into the hardship of life and family, of creating a personality and mask consonant with his troubled feelings.

But who is Barak Hussein Obama?

a.k.a. Barry Soetoro
a.k.a. Barry Obama
a.k.a. Barak Dunham

Kenyan citizen? Indonesian citizen? United States of America citizen?

Try to find his medical records, you can't, he has not given them out.

Try to find his college papers, you can't and he won't release them or his senior thesis on his views of The Soviet Union and disarmament.

Try to find any article he wrote for the Harvard Law School Law Review, a newspaper, while he was its President.

Try to find any of his records from Occidental College, Columbia University or Harvard Law School, you won't, Obama has refused to release any and all of them.

Actually try and find objective, verifiable "proof" of his birth, and citizenship...none have been provided, despite a formal request for certified documents to Obama and the Democratic National Convention (see the civil complaint filed by Philip J. Berg).

Ask him about his close personal relationship with Dr. Khalid Abdullah Tariq al Mansour, a radical Muslim that prophesied of a black massacre, and powerful influence in his acceptance into Harvard many years ago (Attorney for Malcolm X, and Civil rights activist Percy Sutton said in October 2008 he was solicited by Dr. Khalid al-Mansour to send a letter of recommendation on behalf of Barack Obama); Obama will only say he has had dinner with the man and his family, and leaves it at that.

Obama and Dr. Khalid al-Mansour

[Al-Mansour, whose real name is Don Warden, is a notorious black nationalist, radical Muslim and a sworn enemy of Israel and Christianity.

According to the Social Activism Project at the University of California, Berkeley, al-Mansour was a mentor/advisor to Black Panther Party founder Huey Newton and Bobby Seale – both violent criminals. In fact, al-Mansour helped establish the Black Panther Party, a violent black-Marxist organization of the 60's and 70's, but broke with the group when it began working with white revolutionaries.

Al-Mansour is the same man, during a speech entitled “Christians Designed Discrimination” stated; “White people...don't feel bad, whatever you do to them they deserve it. God wants you to do it, and that's when you cut out the nose, cut out the ears, take flesh out of their body...don't worry because God wants you to do it.”^{466]}

Indeed the very essence of Obama's personality is the perpetual, eternal promise unfulfilled. Obama's “Hope” is the absence of reality, the unattainable in his own life scaled up to a national fantasy which he hopes to peddle to an unsuspecting populace and especially young people. When he fails, they will feel betrayed.

Who is Barak Hussein Obama? Obama is a liberal, and a rather radical liberal at that.

Barry the Radical Socialist Liberal

Born to Russian-Jewish parents in Chicago in 1909, Saul Alinsky was a Marxist, and the father of community organizing who helped establish the dual political tactics of confrontation and infiltration that characterized the 1960s and have remained central to all subsequent revolutionary movements in the United States. Before Alinsky devised his diabolical plan to bring the international socialist revolution to America -- working within the very liberal and free system upon which the U.S. was founded -- he was an older fellow traveler^J and advisor to student radicals of the 1960s.

^J The term fellow traveler (poputchiki) was used by Vladimir Lenin and other Bolsheviks to describe those who agreed with the principles of socialism; it has also been used to describe one who sympathizes with or supports the tenets and program of an organized group, such as the Communist Party, without being a “card-carrying” member.

Alinsky was a sort of father figure, to whom many radicals turned in the aftermath of the infamous DNC Convention of 1968 in Chicago. Two of his most notable acolytes were Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama.

What was Alinsky's advice?

"Do one of three things. One, go find a wailing wall and feel sorry for yourselves. Two, go psycho and start bombing -- but this will only swing people to the right. Three, learn a lesson. Go home, organize, build power and at the next convention, you be the delegates." (emphasis in original) - Saul Alinsky; Rules for Radicals; p. xxiii

At the time, however, some of the young radicals were still too filled with rage to stop burning and bombing. These fiery revolutionaries continued to wreak havoc on college campuses and in American cities. But the end of the Vietnam War brought a welcome sigh of relief to greater America.

It was time for the radicals to change tactics, and follow Alinsky's advice. They remained convinced of their destiny to be the ones to bring the U.S.A. into the fold of the international socialist collective. They began to organize, go to law school, run for public office, whittle away at traditional American institutions, and in all ways prepare for "The One," their closer.

Obama was raised on the mother's milk of socialism. Both his parents were fellow travelers, who met at the height of the Cold War in a Russian language class at the University of Hawaii. Obama's grandfather was a close friend of Communist Party member and verified Soviet intelligence agent Frank Marshall Davis, sending young Barry (as he was then known) to him for mentoring.

Obama did everything Alinsky prescribed. He went to Chicago, home of Alinsky and the place where Davis had worked for the communist revolution. Obama trained at the Industrial Areas Foundation, an Alinsky training institute. He organized in Chicago and did voter registration and training for ACORN, a community-based organization tied to fraudulent voter registration.⁴⁶⁷ (During the 2008 election season, ACORN gathered over 1.3 million voter registration forms in 21 states, with approximately 400,000 being ultimately rejected as incomplete, duplicated or fraudulent – an astounding 31% error rate.) He went to law school. He built political alliances. He kept a tight lock on his records and his past.

As for Judeo/Christian morals - Forget it, not necessary or wanted. Alinsky trained his radicals in the spirit of no-holds-barred methods. In Alinsky's mind, the American power structure was evil to its core and justified any means necessary to change the "world as it is" into the "world as it should be." Both Barack and Michelle Obama include these Alinsky code words in their speeches, and we should not mistake their meaning. No means are out of bounds.

Alinsky's tenth rule of the ethics of means: "You do what you can with what you have and clothe it with moral garments."

Conclusion

Reading about Mr. Obama, whether autobiographically or not, wasn't what I originally set out or purposed to do. But after a series of emails from the Obama campaign machine prior to his election, I wanted to try and discover who Barak Obama is. I thought, what better way than to discover this information directly from the source.

After reading Obama's The Audacity of Hope: Thoughts on Reclaiming the American Dream, I am more uncertain about who he really is. At Amazon.com I rated this book a two star because it is well written, concise and polished - as it should be coming from a former editor-in-chief of a prestigious law journal...but, the content seemed crafted for maximum positive public approval. Audacity included all the right stories to elicit pathos, all the right phrases that can be turned into sound bites, etc. It seems believable IF you want a fairy tale and that is what you are desperately looking for and wanting at this juncture in America's history, but it doesn't jive with the reality of the multi-dimensional world we live in.

Mr. Obama has very cleverly and wisely crafted a public persona that seems very, very different from the harsh, autocratic, scandal-ridden lives of some former politicians. He appears to be above the fray, above it all actually. But my experience with his "people" has been quite different, and that was the reason for reading up on Mr. Obama.

Here is what happened:

In an effort to objectively write a key chapter in my last book, America, You Will Be Destroyed!: Thus Saith The Lord - and Other Amazing Prophecies I read various Hillary books as a part of my research. Despite what some may think, I was not looking for information about scandals, I was trying to capture the psyche and inner workings of the former First Lady. This work is scientifically called meta-analysis. I did not have a political agenda, nor was/is my goal a financial one. I was trying to see if Hillary's personality and historical/political track record closely matched key identifiers that established her as the possible subject of an astounding prophecy made in 1933.

What my research uncovered was not only data to verify the prophecy, but the means to fulfill it. In a nutshell the prophecy stated that a woman would raise up within America who would become a great leader, the president - and possibly even its first dictator. In 1933, the possibility of a woman president was very remote, let alone a dictator of any gender. But a series of events that happened AFTER the prophecy was announced has created a political and legal mechanism for a virtual dictatorship - this I was not aware of.

As I read it, this new legislation signed on May 9, 2007, declares that in the event of a "catastrophic event", the President can take total control over the government and the country, bypassing all other levels of government at the state, federal, local, territorial and tribal levels, and thus ensuring total unprecedented dictatorial power. By proclaiming and putting into effect Executive Order No. 12919 and Executive Order 12407, the President would put the United States under total Martial Law and Military Dictatorship.

This research concerned me, and I thought that as an opponent of Hillary Clinton, Mr. Obama would be well-advised. I also thought that as a self-proclaimed Christian and lover of America (and all that that implies), he would at least be of some interest regarding a distinct prophecy given by a noted and respected historically recognized evangelist/prophet.

So I went to an Obama web site and signed up, then went to a few support groups and signed up, then I attempted to provide this information to Obama supporters, and that is when I realized that the Obama that is self-portrayed may be very different than the Obama in reality. I received numerous return emails from his supporters, the preponderance which were nasty, vitriolic, and filled with hate, loathing and disrespect to me personally, to Christianity secondarily and to all prophetic-based religions in general (Christianity, Judaism and Islam). I was told that no sane society believes in prophecy, that the foretelling of events by God through human instrumentation was "prophetic crap" or "B.S.", and specifically that Obama was a "secular humanist." (I saved all the emails).

The bottom line? Though Obama has been very careful to historically maintain a moderate persona, who he associates with and what his associates do are at odds with his persona. Mr. Obama states; "there's not a black America and a white America and Latino America and Asian America. There's the United States of America..." It sort of makes you feel all warm and fuzzy hearing that, right? But is that really what he believes? For many years Obama has attended the Trinity United Church of Christ in Chicago, a church that refers to themselves as "African people." Trinity embraces a "Black Values System" that encourages its members to be "soldiers for Black freedom" and states that they are "unashamedly black." Hmmm.

If any other politician chose to attend an ethno-centric church or organization, they would certainly be ripped apart for that association. Obama says he doesn't engage in smear tactics or petty character assassinations, yet the infamous "Hillary as Dictator" YouTube spoof of the Apple 1984 commercial was produced by the Obama support machine. Hillary is, well, Hillary. As an aside, politically, their voting records are nearly the same. In conclusion; regarding Obama, if a person is willing to scratch the surface of his facade, his hypocrisy is eerily identical (from an arms-length) to Hillary. What he has projected in his book, and his presidential campaign is not Obama the person - but Obama the persona.

While Obama claims to be moving along Robert Frost's "road not taken," in reality he is on the same road, seeking the same fund raising contributors (tens of millions of dollars), seeking to stimulate the same media hysteria and ultimately seeking to run a traditional campaign while claiming he is doing precisely the opposite. In short, Obama in his "Mask" is a smoke-and-mirrors artist who is fully capable of convincing himself of the truthfulness of his delusions. The same way children are.

Obama has succeeded largely by his successful concealment at the margins. Obama's natural tendency, his default state of mind, is to evade, conceal, avoid--and escape. He managed to hide his middle name in 2004; he can't any longer. Questions of family background will forever plague him.

All of the inadequacies and frustrations he perceived as a child still drive him and still control his personality. He won't learn how to remove the Mask because he continues to be afraid there is nothing behind it.⁴⁶⁸
